Packing and Shipping:

Frosted tempered glass is typically packaged, stored and shipped in a variety of ways depending on the size, shape, and weight of the glass. Generally speaking, smaller pieces are packaged in corrugated boxes with plenty of cushioning material. Larger pieces may be packaged in wooden crates or pallets with cushioning material and shrink-wrapped for extra protection. For shipping, frosted tempered glass is typically shipped via common carrier, such as a trucking company. Depending on the size and weight of the glass, it may be best to ship it on a flatbed truck, in an enclosed trailer, or via freight rail.
